

Bernie Sanders: The Dream Is Over

Bernie Sanders is a soi-disant Socialist. I take that to mean, in 21st century terms for instance, that health care is to be considered a fundamental human right. Medical care should be free for all people regardless of race, creed, color, gender preference, economic circumstances or citizenship.

Canada and Great Britain are two examples of modern societies that have implemented government-run health care systems. Critics are quick to point out that these systems are often characterized by shortages, long waiting times, corruption and substandard care. In Canada, the running joke is that sure, you can get high-quality health care, but only if you're a politician or a hockey player. Economically speaking, many of these government-run health care systems seem to be in a state of slow-motion collapse as funding them requires both high taxes and beaucoup de money printing.

Regardless, the point I want to make here is that I presume the reason Bernie Sanders is a Socialist is because he wants to make the world a better place. Fairer. More equal. More just. If you're a Socialist, it's immoral to let poor people suffer from a lack of medical care when that same medical care is readily available for people who can afford it.

Sanders has spent his entire political career advocating for Socialist policies, and young people adore him based on his Socialist vision of America and beyond. He's 82 now, and I would think that by the time one has reached that age, one would be in "eff u" mode when it comes to compromising the sacred ideals that one has built up over a lifetime. Apparently, that seems not to be the case for the much-beloved Bernie Sanders.

Here is a tweet Sanders put out providing his official commentary on the Israeli-Hamas conflict.

"The Netanyahu government, or hopefully a new Israeli government, must understand that not one penny will be coming to Israel from the U.S. unless there is a fundamental change in their military and political positions. Read my statement:"

He went on to say that yes, Israel has a right to defend itself, but only if Israel doesn't hurt any Palestinians in the process. The toxic meme that Sanders is referring to, in its most primitive form, is that Israelis are intentionally killing innocent Palestinian women and children in Gaza while Hamas is the cherubic victim of this genocidal rampage. This waffling, weasel-speak message was concocted by Leftists to provide cover for Democrat politicians and other activists who are afraid to come out and voice their full-throated support for Hamas. I'm guessing that internal polling shows that advocating for a psychotic barbaric murderous entity like Hamas doesn't sit well with voters.

This is a disillusionary moment for me personally. Obviously, Sanders is pandering to the pro-terrorism, anti-Israeli Democrat party base. But to witness a titan of Socialism as he flushes all of his values and ideals down the toilet is more than disheartening. This is Sander's vision of a Socialist Utopian Paradise? To be ruled by psychopathic totalitarian monsters who invade other people's countries to kill their babies and chop off their heads? It sure doesn't sound to me like a policy that will lead us away from centuries of senseless, hate-filled animalistic butchery and help propel this troubled planet to a time when all the peoples of the world will live together in peace and harmony.

The Democrat party has lost its way. Bernie Sanders is a traitor to the Great-Awakening movement.

The Dream is over.
